Representative Juan Vargas,

The Supreme Court decision in the case Trump v. United States, decided July 1, 2024, is a decidedly mixed decision. It does not provide reasonable, much less concrete, guidelines for determining if a presidential action is immune from the rule of law. While there can be no absolute decision for any future action, there can be a process to be followed. To this effect I have written some suggestions that may be useful in the creation of legislation to resolve this problem. The suggestions are written so as to be applicable to any person operating under the auspices of any level government within these United States.

We further recognize the possibility that the Supreme Court might invalidate any Congressional law such as this, therefore requiring a constitution amendment. Lets hope not.

Please be so kind as to read these suggestions and consider appropriate legislation.

Thank you for your time and patience,

My name and address.
